The Three Wishes Project began almost 6 years ago, out of a passion to share the rarely heard voices of Palestinian and Israeli youth with audiences in Ann Arbor. Struggling to make sense of the conditions under which they live, these young people critically engage their experiences and what the adult world is telling them. Through reading six stories (taken from Deborah Ellis's Three Wishes: Palestinian and Israeli Children Speak, 2004), our students give voice to these young people who struggle to make sense of conditions they've had no part in creating but must still think, feel, reflect, and act. We invite you to listen deeply to these voices and to join us after the readings in reflecting on, and giving voice to, the meanings of what Palestinian-Israeli youth continue to experience.
